Beacon Street brownstone owner claiming negligence

Civil complaint. The lawsuit alleges that welding work being performed next door was not properly permitted and caused the deadly fire.

The estate of a Back Bay building where a massive fire broke out last month, killing two Boston firefighters, is suing the welding company that allegedly started the blaze.

An attorney for Herbert Lerman, the executor of 298 Beacon St., filed the lawsuit last week in Suffolk Superior Court. The suit seeks an unspecified amount to cover the property damage and loss of income.

The massive nine-alarm Beacon Street fire on March 26 trapped Boston Fire Lt. Edward Walsh and Firefighter Michael Kennedy in the basement, killing them. On April 4, authorities said they believe sparks from welding work being done in the rear of 296 Beacon St. caused the fire.

The complaint names the defendants as D & J Iron Works of Malden; its owner, Giuseppe Falcone, and the owner of the neighboring building where the welding work was being performed. Messages left at D & J Iron Works and for Falcone's lawyer were not returned by press time.

"Lerman is informed and believes that … [neither] D & J nor Falcone requested a permit from the city of Boston to perform the welding work," lawyers wrote.

"D & J had a duty to exercise reasonable care to prevent damage to adjoining property owners in connection with the welding work," lawyers wrote in the complaint. "Due to the inherently dangerous nature of the welding work, D & J had a duty to take special precautions to prevent damage to adjoining property."

It goes on to allege that neither the building owner, welding company nor Falcone ensured there would be a firefighter at the site, maintained a fire extinguisher or installed a fire-resistant shield to prevent ignition of combustible construction materials, as required by code. Authorities previously said there was no permit pulled or fire detail onsite during the welding work. A permit is required by law, and in many cases a fire detail also must be present.

During a news conference announcing the cause of the fire, Boston Fire Department Interim Commissioner John Hasson said that once a permit is pulled for welding work, a fire official will go to the work site to determine the potential hazards and decide whether a fire detail is necessary.

Multiple agencies, including Boston police and the Suffolk district attorney's office are involved in the investigation.

Fire officials said strong winds on the day of the fire helped it race through the brownstone, which contained eight apartments. All of the apartments were leased, the lawsuit said.

Giving it time

A lawyer who represents Falcone told the Globe that the public should keep an open mind while the investigation continues.

- Falcone "is not acknowledging that he was involved in any way, shape or form," Boston attorney Richard Bardi told the Globe. "He wishes for everyone to allow the investigation to [take] place."
- He also asked that everyone keep the families of the firefighters in their minds while the circumstances of the blaze are still investigated.

In court. Tsarnaev friend wants change of venue

A friend of the accused Boston Marathon bomber asked a judge Tuesday to move his trial on charges of interfering with the investigation, arguing that publicity has made it impossible for him to get a fair hearing in Massachusetts.

Kazakh exchange student Dias Kadyrbayev's filing joins earlier motions by two other defendants, Azamat Tazhayakov, also of Kazakhstan, and Robel Phillipos, of Cambridge.

The men face criminal charges for going to Dzhokhar Tsarnaev's dorm room and removing a backpack containing empty fireworks shells and a laptop. REUTERS

The spring edition of Boston Calling is weeks away from setting up on City Hall Plaza, but the biannual music festival is already announcing the lineup for its fall installment.

Lorde, Nas, The Roots, Childish Gambino and The 1975 are among the 22 acts that make up the festival's fall lineup, which Boston Calling will announce today. Also joining the ticket is The National, which was one of the bands that played the first Boston Calling in May 2013.

All four of Boston Calling's lineups have been co-curated by The National's Aaron Dessner.

"Collaborating on the programming of Boston Calling has been such a great experience for me, and I feel we are getting better and better with each edition," Dessner said in a statement. "We were able to book several of my favorite artists in the world for September's lineup."

Nas, who is celebrating the 20th anniversary of his debut album "Illmatic," will perform with The Roots. Other acts performing during the upcoming fall show include: The Replacements, Neutral Milk Hotel, Spoon, Girl Talk, Twenty One Pilots and The Hold Steady.

Boston Calling debuted last May as a two-day festival and followed up with another show last fall. The festival quickly earned popularity and attracts tens of thousands of music fans to City Hall Plaza.

The upcoming fall show will take place over three days from Sept. 5-7. Early bird tickets go on sale Thursday.

Tickets are still available for the upcoming show in May, which will feature Jack Johnson, Death Cab for Cutie, Modest Mouse and Bastille, among others.

Ninety-nine percent of runners finish 'epic' race

See more at www.metro.us

Monday's 118th running of the Boston Marathon is being deemed a success by its organizers. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Marathon recap. The 118th Boston Marathon went off without a hitch.

Nearly the entire field of the 118th Boston Marathon completed Monday's race, the Boston Athletic Association said Tuesday at a post-race news conference.

The association reported that 99 percent of the 32,408 runners who took off from Hopkinton crossed the Boylston Street finish line.

"One word I have to describe it all — epic," race director Dave McGillivray said on Tuesday.

"What we do here in Boston, and how [Monday's] race was played out, will set the stage for every other road race, maybe every other event, in the country and in the world. And thank God everything went so well."

McGillivray said more than one million spectators turned out along the 26.2-mile course, and several million more followed the race globally.

"We will never see this again, this was a race for the ages for sure," he said.

More than 3,760 runners were treated along the course, according to BAA medical director Chris Troyanos. Ninety-two runners were taken to area hospitals and 20 were kept overnight.

Supreme Court

High court upholds Michigan ban on college affirmative action admissions

The U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday dealt a blow to the use of racial preferences in higher education by upholding a Michigan law that bans the practice in state university admissions.

On a 6-2 vote, the court rejected a challenge to the voter-approved ban, although the justices were divided as to the legal rationale. The court made it clear it was not deciding the larger and divisive question of whether affirmative action admission policies can be lawful.

The majority opinion rejected the argument made by civil right groups that the 2006 Michigan constitutional amendment that passed as a ballot initiative to ban the practice had imposed burdens on racial minorities in violation of the U.S. Constitution's guarantee of equal protection.

"This case is not about how the debate about racial preferences should be resolved. ... It is about who may resolve it." Kennedy

In 2012, a divided 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati ruled the ban unconstitutional, prompting an appeal.

On Tuesday, the justices in the majority were divided three ways.

Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote an opinion, joined by Chief Justice John Roberts and Justice Samuel Alito, saying that the appeals court that threw out the law did not have the authority to do so. REUTERS

Court hears challenge to 'false' campaign speech ban

U.S. Supreme Court justices across the ideological spectrum voiced doubts on Tuesday about a state law that prohibits false statements during a political campaign.

The Ohio law allows candidates and other citizens to file a complaint for allegedly false slogans, prompting a state election commission hearing and public scrutiny of advocacy groups' or individuals' claims in the middle of a campaign.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, a Republican appointee, speculated that calling in a group's leaders "to justify what [they're] going to say" could impinge on free speech rights under the U.S. Constitution's First Amendment. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a Democratic appointee, observed that simply being forced to defend an advertisement could be costly and diminish speech at a crucial point in a campaign. REUTERS

Syria's chemical weapon wildcard: Chlorine gas

Chlorine gas attacks in Syria this month, if proven, expose a major loophole in an international deal to remove chemical weapons from Syria and suggest chemical warfare could persist after the removal operation has finished.

President Bashar al-Assad agreed with the United States and Russia to dispose of his chemical weapons — an arsenal that Damascus had never previously formally acknowledged — after hundreds of people were killed in a sarin gas attack on the outskirts of the capital last August.

Washington and its Western allies said it was Assad's forces who unleashed the nerve agent, in the world's worst chemical attack in a quarter-century. The government blamed the rebel side in the civil war, which is now in its fourth year. REUTERS

Investigators. West, Texas fertilizer warehouse blast was preventable

The remains of an apartment complex and a destroyed car lies in ruins next to the fertilizer plant that exploded on April 18, 2013 in West, Texas. / GETTY IMAGES

A deadly 2013 fertilizer warehouse explosion in Texas that claimed at least 14 lives could have been prevented, U.S. safety investigators said on Tuesday.

Between 40 and 60 tons of ammonium nitrate exploded 22 minutes after a fire broke out at the West Fertilizer Co. warehouse on April 17, 2013, leveling a neighborhood in the town of West, 70 miles southwest of Dallas.

The ammonium nitrate, which the company supplied to farmers to use as fertilizer in the region, was stored in wooden bins within a wooden building that did not have a sprinkler system, said Rafael Moure-Eraso, chairman of the U.S. Chemical Safety Board.

If those factors had not been in place, the disaster probably never would have happened, Moure-Eraso told a news conference about the board's preliminary findings.

The board said the state of Texas and federal regulators had much to do to strengthen rules to prevent explosions like the one in West, which injured 236 people.

Volunteer firefighters battling the blaze did not know the risks they faced from fertilizer stored at the warehouse, because of lax regulation of volunteer training and inadequate preparations for fires at chemical facilities, the board said.

The board also said that safer blends of ammonium nitrate that could prevent explosions should be considered, in addition to tightening standards at chemical warehouses. REUTERS

Spelling will be sobbing on the therapist's couch on the premiere of "True Tori." / LIFETIME

Spelling is milking this whole affair thing

Does watching someone's marriage implode make for great TV? For me, it makes me want to down a giant vodka smoothie, especially when young children are involved. However, the show runners at "True Tori" (as well as the publisher of Us Weekly in a timed cover story) think mining Dean McDermott's cheating on wife Tori Spelling is hot stuff indeed.

On last night's premiere of Lifetime's "True Tori," McDermott comes clean about having an affair in December with a 28-year-old in a filmed (!) marriage therapy session with Spelling. "My worst nightmare is what I did. Absolutely, I cheated on my wife," he tells the therapist. "I wasn't attracted to her. It was just like a warm body. Sex was an escape, just like drugs and alcohol."

But then he kind of blames the affair on his bad sex life with Spelling. "We had sex once every two weeks. It wasn't fantastic," he said of what occurred in their marital bed.

The two are parents to four children — Liam, 7, Stella, 5, Hattie, 2, and Finn, 20 months.

For her part, Spelling seems to be milking the cheating for all it's worth — she appears on the cover of this week's Us Weekly in an exclusive story "about her own traumatic experience with discovering the affair."

I hope they took their kids aside and told them that this was all a ruse to help pay for their college educations. "OK, children. Mommy and Daddy are going to go on national TV to air a crazy amount of dirty laundry. Mommy is also going to appear on the cover of a tabloid about how your father cheated on her. We're sorry for the incredible amount of exposure and the embarrassment this will cause you but you need to go to college so you don't end up like us: fame-hungry bloodsuckers who will sell a devastating event from our lives to the highest bidder."

The Foxx and the bird

I wish I knew the backstory behind why Jamie Foxx is posing with this adorable bird of prey while volunteering for the "Be Amazing" Habitat Restoration Project on Monday in Mountain View, Calif., but all I know is this popped up on my computer screen and I knew I had to share it world. I hope the two of them go on to film the best buddy cop movie of all time. GETTY IMAGES

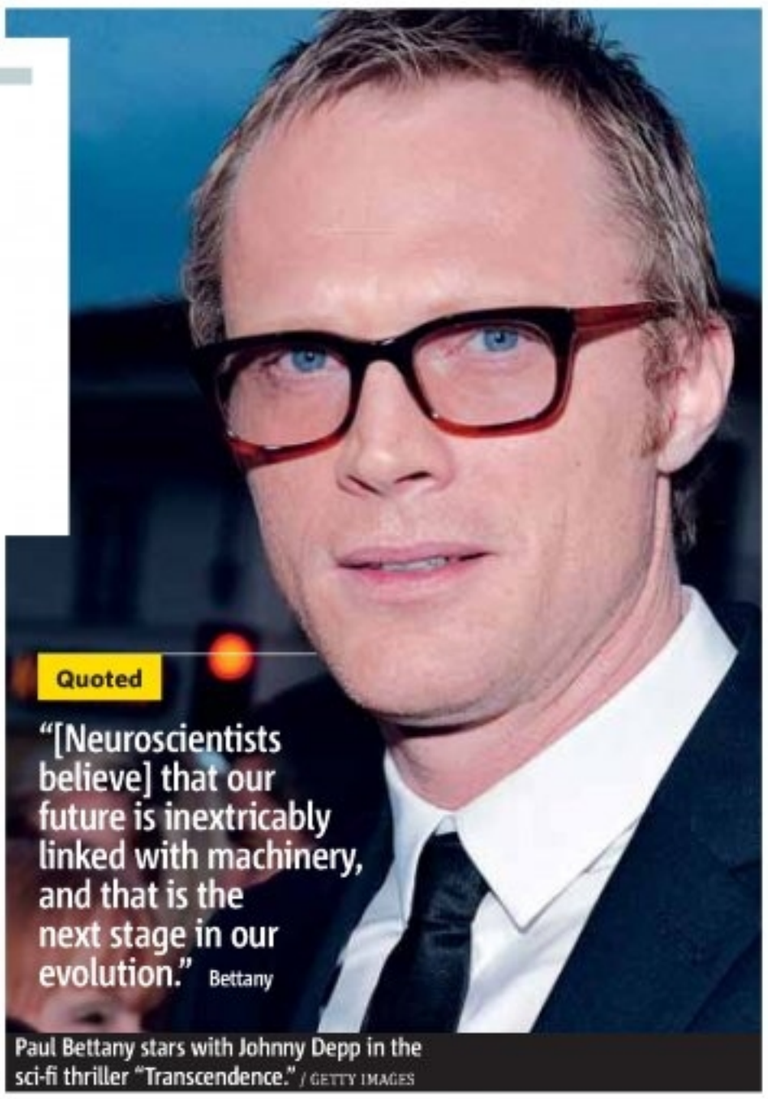
PAUL BETTANY

He says the tech milestones of "Transcendence" are about 30 years away.

BLINDING YOU WITH SCIENCE



Quoted
"[Neuroscientists believe] that our future is inextricably linked with machinery, and that is the next stage in our evolution." Bettany

In "Transcendence," Paul Bettany's character is the first to raise concerns about plans to upload the consciousness of his friend (Johnny Depp) onto a computer as his body fails him. And apparently, in real life it takes much less than that to get Bettany worried about technology.

How plausible is the technology in this film?
Interestingly enough, I went to see a man at Caltech, one of the foremost neuroscientists in the world. He'd read the script, and I said, "Look, I'm just wondering, how far-fetched is this idea?" And he said, "Thirty years." In 30 years we'll upload a human brain into a computer, like you would a song onto an iPod. And I went, "But that's immortality," and he went, "Yes." And this guy isn't a kook. He believes, as do most neuroscientists in the world, that our future is inextricably linked with machinery, and that is the next stage in our evolution.

How do you feel about that concept?
I don't know, I think I feel rather like [my character]: a little concerned about the whole idea. Are we human at that point? Probably not. I mean, it would be the first organism in the history of this planet — which has seen 98 percent of the species that have lived on it wiped out and succumbed to evolution — that opts out of that cruel process. That's an extraordinary thought.

Q&A

Teach your children

Do you personally have a sense of how far is too far?
I'm a father and I have rules about how long my children are on computer games and how much they're on their phones — and it's very easy to get swept up in it yourself. ... I try to be quite strict about that with myself. But I think it's impossible for us to know. The power of computers is expanding exponentially. Kasparov laughed at the computer that he'd beat and then the next year lost. You're not talking about incremental growth. ... What can we do to remain the masters of it? I'm not sure people are the masters of their connections with phones. I know people who have admitted to me that at dinner they'll go to the toilet to check their mail. That's not being in control — that's the need being in control of you.

"The Shape She Makes" blends dance and live theater in an exciting production. / MARCUS STERN, A.R.T.

"The Shape She Makes" is a fascinating blend of theater and dance in a narrative that exposes human vulnerability in its purest form.

Initially, the beauty of the movement lures you into an almost euphoric expectation of 90 minutes of impeccably executed modern dance. But the ugliness of humanity proves a jarring juxtaposition to this fluidity, and the result is a dizzying mix of beauty and beast in this masterfully told tale.

The life story of Quincy Calvin (Sydney K. Penny) is seen through a series of nonlinear flashbacks and current events that culminate in her speech celebrating the eight people in 75 years with perfect scores in the Brackstone Testing's national math contest. (See the program for sample questions.) Quincy, born Quincy Beth Harris, and her now-dead, alcoholic father belong to this elite group.

Quincy's intelligence is one facet of a complicated, sad life in which her fullest potential has yet to be realized. As the story unfolds, however, it becomes clear that Quincy is complicit in her own destiny. Can she change?

Susan Misner (who co-created the piece with Jonathan Bernstein) delivers an amazing performance as Quincy's mother, Louise. With an incredible attention to detail, she perfectly captures both the bitter young mom and her frail, miserable elderly self.

Finnerty Steeves is also great as the older Quincy Calvin. The pain of emotional neglect manifests in everything she does, and her despair is palpable enough to elicit tears.

Theater of this caliber is an extraordinary treat to experience. NICK DUSSAULT

How to spot a spy

Interview. Actor Costa Ronin explains what separates the good spies from the bad.

"The Americans" thrives on never quite revealing exactly what motivates its various spies and government agents. Who can be trusted, and who has a hidden agenda?

While Noah Emmerich's Stan Beeman navigates the FBI, his counterparts in the Russian Rezidentura have a new face in their midst: Oleg Burov, played by Costa Ronin.

Oleg had one of the show's finer introductions: He missed a summons from Rezidentura head Arkady Ivanovich (Lev Gorn) because he was listening to American music too loudly on his headphones. Arkady was quick to write him off as a rich man's son using his connections to get ahead, but Oleg has proven resourceful.

Oleg comes off as pretty confident about his spycraft, but Ronin warns us: "That's his persona." That's the case with everyone on the show, says Ronin. "Everybody's so good at hiding what they think and hiding what they feel because a small display of weakness can lead to somebody dying."

Oleg's bravado may be more for protection than anything else. "He cannot let them see how smart he is, he cannot let them see how savvy he is, he cannot show them all the cards that he's got," Ronin says.

But don't assume that stony-faced people in suits make good agents. Ronin says the good ones are "the friendliest people you will ever meet, the people who will bring cupcakes to your Sunday brunch, who will pick up your kids from school. ... To be the best, you cannot be thought of [as] being a spy."

Slow car chases to race ahead

Oleg has been facing off with Beeman, which began after a slow-paced but intense car chase, of which Ronin says, "They did have to tell me to slow down a few times." He blackmails Beeman over his involvement with Rezidentura employee Nina (Annet Mahendru), whom Oleg is also seeing. Will it come crashing down on him?

"The show's about people and how they struggle with what they have to do," says Ronin. What, exactly, will Oleg have to do?

Watch "The Americans" Wednesdays at 10 p.m. on FX to see whether he's just clever enough to stay ahead.

Etsy meets West Elm

Shopping. Savvy decorators don't have to search Etsy to find some of their favorite Boston designers.

West Elm has gone local. That is, six of the national homegoods chain's stores added items from several local artisans, one of which is Boston's Fenway store.

"Our local assortment really brings that sense of community into our store," says Chris Thibeau, West Elm Fenway's general manager. "The response has been overwhelmingly positive. Our customers are so excited to see these goods in our store and have been eager to share recommendations of their favorite makers with us."

One such local company is Plum Island's Culinarium, which crafts kitchenware from recycled and renewable materials.

"We get a lot of requests from local customers who would like to view our products in a brick-and-mortar store," says Culinarium's designer and crafter, Jordan Castro. "We've been working hard to grow our business, but we have also been very careful about the partnerships that we form."

The Seaport's Uncommon Green, which makes glassware etched with street maps, is another local company the Fenway store now stocks.

"We've found that people really connect with our products when they see them up close and hold them in their hands," says Uncommon Green designer and founder Brian Johnson. "So, to partner with West Elm and have our designs seen there is an incredible opportunity to engage with a bigger audience right here in our hometown."

Besides boosting business, both Johnson and Castro also find the partnership creatively inspirational.

"Seeing our brand amongst so many great products is a strong motivator to keep us on our toes and inspires us to take our game to the next level," says Castro.

"Being on the shelves in the Fenway store is the best kind of validation that we're doing something right," adds Johnson.

Besides Culinarium and the Uncommon Green, West Elm Fenway stocks Somerville's Albertine Press (letterpress note cards, journals and prints), Allston's Forestbound (tote bags made from salvaged textiles), South Boston's JHill Design (Boston-centric posters), Arlington's ReStudios (typography prints), Jamaica Plain's Shanman Clay Co. (ceramic geoplanters), Easthampton's Taylor Ceramics (planters and vases) and Sherborn's Whitney Somerville (natural fiber and water-based ink textiles). "The goal is to grow local offerings significantly, and we are actively finding more and more potential partners every day," says West Elm's Thibeau. "We are open to suggestions and encourage folks to reach out through a dedicated email: welocal@wsgc.com."

The HPV vaccine is recommended for women up to age 26. / PHOTODISC

Stats

60-70%

"Sixty to 70 percent of sexually active women under 25 have been exposed to HPV," says Dr. Divya Gupta, assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Weill Cornell Medical College in New York City.

The cancer you have a say in preventing

Checkup. It's cervical cancer, and here's what you need to know.

It's a disease that takes the lives of about 4,000 women in the U.S. every year, but the good news is that unlike most cancers, cervical cancer is almost 100 percent preventable.

Nearly all cervical cancers are related to HPV infection, which is spread through sexual contact with an infected person. Studies detect HPV in well over 90 percent of women who are diagnosed with the disease — although conversely, many people have been infected with HPV but will never develop cervical cancer.

"Sixty to 70 percent of sexually active women under 25 have been exposed to HPV," says Dr. Divya Gupta, assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Weill Cornell Medical College in New York City. But she adds that in most of them, the infection will regress on its own, unless it's a more aggressive type of HPV.

"It's the persistence of HPV infection that can lead to precancer lesions and ultimately cancer," says Dr. Panos Konstantinopoulos, medical oncologist at the Susan F. Smith Center for Women's Cancer at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

Gynecological screenings at regular intervals are crucial, he adds, because cervical cancer can be detected long before women exhibit any symptoms.

In addition to regular pap tests, the Centers for Disease Control recommends HPV vaccinations for girls and boys as young as 11 or 12. The vaccine has shown to be so effective that some experts credit it with the continuing drop in cervical cancer rates in the United States, and say that the vaccine should become standard care in developing nations, where the disease is on the rise.

Concerned about falling vaccination rates between 2011 and 2012, the CDC issued a statement in July saying that the HPV vaccine is "safe, effective and grossly underutilized," and warned that if vaccinations in the U.S. don't increase, an additional 1,400 people could die from the disease annually.

Although most doctors recommend the HPV vaccine as a safe, effective tool for preventing cervical cancer, some people are suspicious of vaccines in general, and some say that vaccinating teens as young as 11 or even 9, in some high-risk cases, might give kids a false sense of security that could encourage them to engage in unprotected sexual activity. A study published in Pediatrics, however, found that most of the 13- to 24-year-old study participants said that they still think it's important to practice safer sex even if they'd had the vaccine, and most were aware that the HPV vaccination doesn't protect you against other STIs.

And as Hyman points out, "It's important that the vaccine be given before teens become sexually active; once they become infected, it's too late."

Get your pap!

What is HPV?

The human papillomavirus infects the cervix, inserting unhealthy genes into cervix cells. Even if you clear the infection, there's still a risk for developing cervical cancer down the road because those genes can linger, says Dr. David Hyman, clinical oncologist at the Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York City. Doctors have a very high success rate treating the disease, however, because the pap test is such an effective screening tool, says Hyman: "It tends to detect the disease early when it can be cured."

Immigration should be fair

Re: 'Illegal lawlessness' (Metro, April 22) I couldn't agree more with letter writer Ken Wendall regarding the word "illegal." I keep thinking I must be missing some information somewhere, as I can't for the life of me understand how these immigrants, who enter our country illegally, are not deported immediately. How can we expect anyone else who wants to enter the country to do it legally. Why bother with the hassle? Our leaders need to wake up before it's too late.
GAIL MCIVER, VIA EMAIL

Wake up and smell the warming

Re: 'Change your mind on climate change' (Metro, April 22) The reason that scientists changed the nomenclature of the man-made ecological disaster ruining the Earth is because people like letter writer Tom Ward can't understand that the melting ice caps are changing the weather patterns in the U.S. in such a way that winters now feel colder, so, "Hey, why is 'global warming' when it's getting colder?" It almost makes me glad that this nightmare will ultimately engulf all life on this planet, if only to end the miserable blinkered stupidity of such people. JAMES A. WU, VIA EMAIL

It must be nice to live in the comfy fantasy world letter writer Tom Ward inhabits. In this bizarro world, "science and facts are becoming increasingly at odds" with climate change. A climate change denier citing science and facts is the height of hilarity, for they have to make up and/or misrepresent those "facts" or get them from fossil fuel industry sources, who made them up. However, Ward went on to even greater comedy when he claimed that climate scientists lost their raw data — a truly laughable conspiracy theory promoted five years ago by certain right-wing organizations.

Bruins rip Red Wings

NHL. The Bruins used a dominant first period to beat Detroit, 3-0, in Game 3 Tuesday.

Detroit fans booed Bruins forward Milan Lucic every time he touched the puck at the outset of Tuesday night's Game 3 but their resentment quickly shifted to their own team as the Red Wings turned the puck over again and again in the first period.

Lucic and the B's did not hesitate to capitalize on the Red Wings' early miscues at Joe Louis Arena, coming away with a 3-0 victory. They took a 2-1 series lead.

Game 4 is Thursday in Detroit (8 p.m., NESN).

Nine minutes into the first period, Red Wings goaltender Jimmy Howard and the Detroit defense seemed convinced Bruins defenseman Dougie Hamilton was going to dish off the puck on a power play but the 20-year-old kept it for himself and beat Howard over the glove to put the B's up, 1-0, early.

The Red Wings also failed to put a body on a streaming Jordan Caron, fresh off the bench, late in the first period and Caron made Detroit pay with a rebound goal. It was Caron's first career playoff strike.

Boston outshot the Red Wings, 11-4, in a dominant opening frame.

The Red Wings tried to mix and match lineups late in the game but it did not prove fruitful.

Bruins goaltender Tuukka Rask turned in his second straight strong effort as he stopped 23 shots in the shutout win.

Rask had 34 saves and allowed just one goal in the Bruins' 4-1 Game 2 win last Sunday.

Detroit's last true opportunity to mount a comeback in Tuesday's game came 10 minutes into the third period as they owned a power play, but Boston's defense held firm one more time.

The Bruins took advantage of sloppy Detroit play, particularly early Tuesday night, as the Red Wings had eight giveaways to just one for the Bruins. Boston had 34 shots on net in Game 3 while the Red Wings mustered just 23 shots on Tuukka Rask.

Yankees pound Red Sox

Jacoby Ellsbury began New York's big offensive night with a triple Tuesday at Fenway Park as the Yankees knocked around Jon Lester and the Boston pitching staff for a 9-3 victory in the first game of a three-game set in Boston.

Workplace Dynamics

MLB power rankings | by Ryan Hannable

No. 1

Brewers (15-5)

It was a bit of surprise for the Brewers to get off to such a hot start, but they've been able to maintain it. It was expected that their offense would lead the way, but their pitching has actually carried them as they have the second-best ERA in the NL at 2.66.

No. 2

Athletics (13-6)

Oakland has continued its impressive start to the season by winning seven of its last 10 games and has posted an AL-leading plus-31 run differential.

No. 3

Braves (13-6)

The Braves haven't done much offensively this year, scoring an NL East-low 76 runs, but their pitching and defense has been exceptional.

No. 4

Rangers (12-8)

The Rangers have averaged 4.30 runs per game, which is good for sixth in the American League. They've done this without Adrian Beltre, who is on the DL.

No. 5

Dodgers (12-8)

Despite all the off-field distractions surrounding Yasiel Puig, the Dodgers have won six of their last 10. Give them credit for going 8-3 on the road thus far.

No. 6

Cardinals (11-9)

Most know what a great and young pitching staff the Cards have, but it's their offense that might be worth watching now as they are averaging 3.7 runs per game.

No. 7

Yankees (11-8)

The big question with the Yanks has been whether or not they can stay healthy? Tommy John surgery has been recommended for starting pitcher Ivan Nova.

No. 8

Giants (11-9)

After 20 games the Giants have averaged four runs per game, which is surprisingly good for just 11th in the NL. Can they keep pace with the Dodgers out West?

No. 9

Nationals (11-9)

Through the first three weeks of the season it has been the Nats' offense that has caught people's eyes as they've averaged 4.40 runs per game, the third-best mark in the NL.

No. 10

Rockies (11-10)

Colorado has used Coors Field to its advantage as the Rockies have gone 7-3 at home. Overall, the Rockies have scored 114 runs, the best total in all of baseball.

No. 11

Blue Jays (10-9)

Toronto is hanging in there with the rest of the AL East after three weeks, despite going just 3-3 at home. Their pitching has been better than advertised.

No. 12

White Sox (10-10)

Chicago has scored the most runs in the AL, but their pitching has also allowed the most runs. Now Chris Sale is said to be going on the DL, which is a huge blow.

No. 13

Mets (10-9)

Nothing has really stood out for the Mets. They've simply played consistent baseball — something that we haven't seen in Queens in several years.

Rivalry renewed

JOHN LACKEY IS 2-2 ON THE YEAR. GETTY IMAGES

Lackey seeking redemption

The Red Sox and Yankees continue their three-game series at Fenway Wednesday (7 p.m., NESN) as the Sox will send John Lackey (2-2, 5.25 ERA) to the hill to face New York's Michael Pineda (2-1, 1.00 ERA).

Lackey fell hard in his lone outing against the Yanks this season, a 7-4 loss on April 12, in which he allowed a career-high four home runs. Pineda has already gotten the best of the Red Sox this season as he worked six innings on April 10, allowing just one earned run on four hits while striking out seven in a 4-1 Yankees victory.
